Below is a message from his daughter:

There's so much to be said about this man I am privileged to call my father. The most profound thing that comes to mind is his selflessness. I have yet to come across another who loves and gives almost to a fault. If he wasn't opening his home to someone in need he was encouraging and uplifting regardless of what he himself was dealing with. He gave me tough love but it was REAL love. He wasn't perfect but he was perfect to me. He would never forget a birthday or holiday and was sure to include his own cheesy but genuinely written poems in all our cards. Not everyone could handle his blunt sarcasm but I adored it. He had a wonderful sense of humor and taught me to use that to get through life at times; to always remain humble but not to take life too seriously. I could carry on for days on end but I'll just miss you dad. When you used to let me stay up late and watch political comedies with you, when we made bets on how long it would take mom to get ready, I'll miss the way you hugged me like you never wanted to let go. You were my best friend, my father, MY HERO. Although I am in deep despair I know that if you were here you'd be quick to correct me and remind me and others to celebrate you. To cherish and reflect on all the wonderful moments each of us shared with you. I love you daddy.. Until we meet again
